Greater America in the Age of Rebellion

Theme: The True-False Models

First, examples are given:

page 21

False Model: The world's strongest military power is certain to win against rebellious colonists.

True Model: People wishing to govern themselves can claim this right by means of endless guerilla warfare

21

False Model: there is no Russia beyond Moscow; the winter is tolerable; and the Russians will surrender.

True Model: Russia is a vast, cold country and its armies may retreat into that vastness but not be defeated.

22

True Model: The world and its League of Nations would not resist Japanese occupation of Korea and Manchuria and the invasion of China.

False Model: The United States would be rendered unconscious by a devastating sneak attack and would not awaken.

22

False Model: Nations can maintain control over distant territories.

True Model: People wishing to govern themselves can claim this right by means of endless guerilla warfare.

False Model: The Viet Cong and their North-Vietnamese support can be defeated by the superior military force that America is willing to use.

True Model: The North Vietnamese and Viet Cong of South Vietnam will resist with endless guerilla warfare. They would hide in the forest as did George Washington and they would not be defeated.

23

True Model: Saddam Hussein's army was weak.

False Model: Iraq would welcome occupation and quickly become a democracy.

After this introduction, questions are asked:

24

True Model or False Model?

Iraq was a threat to the United States.
